A. Read the text below and respond to tasks A1 and A2.

In today's society, many of us go through our whole lives without ever working with our hands; we live, we work, we eat, we buy, we repeat. Everything is made and delivered quickly, from fast food to fast fashion and, although this may keep the economy going, it's not necessarily good for our mental health, or for our planet.

In recent years there has been a wealth of online craft workshops on everything from collage to flower-arranging. On TV, programmes are encouraging everyone to paint, draw or sculpt their view from a window with whatever materials they have at hand. In the safety of our own homes, we have been able to try knitting for the first time or to have a go at oil pastels -without a teacher but also without the judgment of a teacher. The possibility of experimentation in the solitary environment of our own homes has created higher confidence in our abilities, a prerequisite for learning.

Repairing an item of clothing can enhance the experience of wearing it and leaves the repairer with a renewed sense of closeness and ownership, but it's more than that. When we repair something by hand, our motor skills are carefully developed and our head is fully engaged, leaving a sense of calm and balance. A recent study at Harvard Medical School discovered that repetitive hand-based actions, such as stitching, weaving and knitting, create a measurable state of relaxation, slowing down the heart rate and lowering blood pressure.

Before mass production and readymade products, we had no choice but to repair and maintain the things we owned. Now, when things break, we often don't know how to repair or even recycle them, but more than that, we don't see the need to repair them -and why should we, when everything is so cheaply made and so easily replaced?

The art of repair can be treated as a philosophy, but also as a helpful skill. Mending things ourselves can instil confidence in our own capabilities, which in turn increases our connection to the things we own and the sentimental value we hold for them. After all, certain items are both priceless and irreplaceable, no matter how broken or damaged they are.

(5 x 2 points = 10 points)

Clear Signs You're a Perfectionist

COLUMN A		COLUMN B
20.	Perfectionists can have a serious dark side, according to a study published in the Journal of Psychopathology and Behavioral Assessment. Their high standards and critical nature can make them prone to being narcissistic, antisocial, and having an aggressive sense of humor that other people cannot easily accept, the researchers say.	A.	You don't sleep well
21.	Perfectionism is one of the primary traits linked to chronically feeling sad and anxious, according to research published in the Review of General Psychology. Even more alarming, the scientists found that having perfectionist tendencies significantly raised a person's risk of suicide.	B.	You're self-conscious about your appearance
22.	Not even the most perfect perfectionist can maintain tight control over every aspect of their lives at all times. Eventually they crack under the pressure. One of the more common ways they cope is through eating compulsively and unhealthily, according to research published in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology.	C.	You're depressed
23.	It makes sense that perfectionists would be more stressed out than more easy-going people -we live in an uncontrollably imperfect world, after all. But it turns out that not only are perfectionists more likely to be stressed, they're also less likely (or less able) to take advantage of proven stress-reduction techniques.	D.	You binge on junk food
24.	Perfectionists often spend more time than others choosing outfits, shopping, getting dressed, putting on makeup and looking in the mirror. But it's not just your time that suffers-this focus on looks can make perfectionists more vulnerable to eating disorders like anorexia and bulimia in an attempt to control every aspect of their bodies.	E.	People may avoid you
		F.	Meditation doesn't work for you
